Announcing
the Northern Arizona Writing Project’s
Basic Institute

Who: K-20 educators from private and public schools throughout the area who teach all grade levels and disciplines are invited to apply to NAWP’s Summer Institute. You don’t need to be an English teacher, just someone who wants to teach your students to be better writers!

What: The Summer Institute is the cornerstone of the National Writing Project model. Every summer a select group of distinguished local teachers attend an intensive two-week professional development institute.

When: June 10 – June 21, 2013 from 8am-4pm M-F

Where: The Summer Institute is held at Northern Arizona University.

Why: Taking part in NAWP’s Summer Institute will be one of the best professional development experiences of your career. It will be time consuming and challenging in many ways, but the skills you learn and relationships you develop will be memorable and life-lasting.

In the Institute Participants:

- Write daily for both personal and professional purposes.
- Receive leadership training to enable participants to become expert teachers of teachers.
- Review writing process theory, writing across the curriculum theory, and explore in depth some aspect of writing (alternative assessments, teacher-researcher models, etc.)
- Prepare and demonstrate research projects.
- Graduates become Teacher/Consultants (T/C’s) and join the NAWP network of teachers eligible to lead staff development workshops (often paid opportunities.)
