Cline Library provides access to more than 140 databases, 88,000 e-journals and newspapers, 232,000 ebook titles, 80,000 streamed videorecordings, and 132,000 streamed sound recordings. The traditional collections include more than 460,000 book titles and 6,000 serial titles. Special Collections and Archives holds 20 million unique items focused on the Colorado Plateau and northern Arizona; more than 110,000 are accessible in the online Colorado Plateau Archives, which includes digital content from partners such as the Arizona Historical Society (Flagstaff), the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office, and the Navajo Nation Museum.

OpenKnowledge@NAU, the university’s institutional repository, collects and preserves the intellectual and creative output of the NAU community while making the work more accessible to a wider global audience. Librarians partner with faculty to develop data management plans, plan literature reviews, and develop research assignments and assessments aligned with course and program learning outcomes.

The library’s MakerLab offers 3D printing, scanning, design software, and more for all NAU users and the community. The Studios area offers seven technology-rich media studios for production, practice, viewing, assistive technology, and a larger open iMac Studio. The Assembly Hall serves as a 400-seat multipurpose spaces for classes, lectures, and films. The Learning Studio is a 70-seat space designed to increase engagement and learning for students while supporting “flipped classroom” and other teaching methods for faculty.

The library is open 116.5 hours per week, including until 2 a.m. five nights a week for Fall and Spring semesters and extended hours (including 24-hour days) during End of Term and Finals weeks. It is the largest computing facility on campus and offers NAU users access to more than 260 computers. Students can borrow video cameras, pocket-projectors, extended hard-drives, laptops, and more. A robust wireless network is available to NAU and public users throughout the building.
